We, the youth of today, have inherited the rebellious nature of our forefathers. Each generation has utilized this nature to shape the United States into a leading nation.

Common sense and knowledge are necessary in order for us to use this nature constructively. Common sense is acquired through every day experiences. Knowledge must come with education, not only education administered by teachers and professors, but education obtained through intellectual curiosity.

Able to utilize our rebellious nature, we will run the country someday. We will be better able to understand national problems and consequently, solve them. For with a rebellious nature, deeper insights arise.
